Print The first two years after graduation a chiropractic assistant may act as a team assistant, assisting the principal chiropractor or the other chiropractic staff with their research studies, treatments, or administrative tasks. A staff or administrative chiropractic assistant, however, is required to have a minimum of two years of full-time employment before becoming eligible to apply for a chiropractic associate degree. At this point they may assist the team chiropractor with most of the day to day tasks but cannot act as a team chiropractor. A chiropractic assistant may practice chiropractic medicine only after a chiropractic associate degree has been acquired (as opposed to a chiropractic faculty who may practice while enrolled in a chiropractic program).

Chiropractic assistants are called chiropractic assistants, chiropractic aids, chiropractic office aids, chiropractic assistant or office assistant, and sometimes assistant. Some chiropractic assistants may work as a substitute chiropractor. Some chiropractic assistants have offices, clinics, and practices.
