I need to have the following: All users must be authenticated in the application when using the app. If an unauthenticated user attempts to authenticate in the client app, I want to take them to a sign in screen. I think the client app will authenticate against a cloud firestore database but then pass the UID to my node server that I use for the frontend and server. Users can be accessed at different areas in the app (for example, their personal details, business details). Each authenticated user has a different role in the application. All user data must be secured against reads and writes. (For example, users cannot read or write other users data.) I understand that I need to use firestore security rules and database transactions, and I have looked at the documentation on cloud firestore - but I have not had any luck finding samples or tutorials. A: The Firestore Security Rules docs explain it in a straightforward way. Basically, you use Security Rules to control access to data, so you need to learn the security rules, what the rules do and how they affect your data (i.e. how to successfully write to your database from your Node.js server). The Security Rules docs give you a very clear introduction to it. All users must be authenticated in the application when using the app. If an unauthenticated user attempts to authenticate 1cb139a0ed
