in self-concept over the life span and in psychiatric disorders: an integrative review. Although there are numerous studies on the self-concept and related variables of old age, the research on the self-concept in people with psychiatric disorders is much less extensive, due to the difficulty in finding instruments that are suitable for use in clinical settings. The present integrative review, which was conducted using the conceptual framework of self-concept as developed by Russel, Keller and Roseth, aims to identify and analyse the main themes presented in the literature concerning changes in the self-concept of people with psychiatric disorders during the adult age. A comprehensive review of the literature, published between 2000 and 2015, was performed using the following databases: PsycINFO, Medline, Lilacs, Cochrane Library and Scopus. The keywords and the MeSH terms were chosen based on the following parameters: (a) studies in which an adult with a psychiatric disorder was compared with a control group; (b) studies that investigated the self-concept of adults with psychiatric disorders; (c) studies that analysed the different age groups that comprise the adult age; and (d) the various psychopathological conditions that are the most prevalent in mental health services, including schizophrenia, bipolar disorder, unipolar depression and obsessive-compulsive disorder. The review revealed that self-concept, as a key and necessary component of human behaviour, is not restricted to the adult age. There are also important changes in self-concept during the transition from adolescence to adulthood, even though there is less evidence about this in the literature than in the old age stage. Some important aspects and ways of analysing changes in the self-concept of people with psychiatric disorders were identified. Despite the difficulties that arise in the use of self-concept in a clinical setting, the findings of this review highlight the need to expand the scope of the research to examine different age groups and different psychiatric disorders, as well as to compare groups with and without psychiatric disorders in order to increase the understanding of the effects of the presence of psychiatric disorders on the self-concept in the adult age. Q: Creating Directory/Directory in application I'm wondering if its possible to create a directory on the users desktop. i.e. if the user double clicks a button a directory is created in the users desktop and the directory is given a name and it's contents copied from another directory.

IIS Log Cleaner Crack+ Registration Code (2022)

IIS Log Cleaner is a light and simple software utility that will eliminate your IIS server's old log files, allowing you to remove unwanted files from the specified directory. IIS Log Cleaner has minimal system requirements, requiring only a minimum of 1GB of hard disk space. Fully adjustable settings are available, as well as a specific directory where the application operates, allowing you to alter the 'MaxAge' value, from 30 days to 180 days. IIS Log Cleaner has a user-friendly and easily understandable interface that will easily allow you to operate the tool and alter its working settings. It is portable and thus can be placed on any USB stick and will be available when the USB is connected to the computer. Simply place the IIS Log Cleaner executable on your USB stick, launch it and begin cleaning your old IIS log files. The program operates in a similar manner as Disk Cleaner, as you will be given several options, allowing you to choose the type of removal you wish to do. It also has options where you can also choose to delete the files in the application's current working directory as well as the files in the Windows 'Desktop' folder. As the process is highly efficient, you will be able to wipe out most of your IIS log files within minutes and easily prevent them from being found in your server.
