What's New in the?

PowerPlanSwitcher provides you with a more accessible way of switching between the default and user-created power plans. What's more, it is capable of setting a different schema whenever an AC adapter is connected or disconnected. AppWatcher is an application-centric automatic software updater. It has an ability to check for updates, and when there are any, show it in a convenient, system tray application. It automatically scans for new releases on a daily basis. AppWatcher is a lightweight application that is compatible with both 32-bit and 64-bit Windows operating systems. What's more, it works well on portable devices that have a relatively slow Internet connection. Even though it does have its limitations, this application is still capable of delivering an effective user experience. Automatic application update checking You will be notified about any new releases that are available in the store using this application. As a consequence, you do not have to visit Microsoft's site in order to check for new app versions. Once the updates are detected, they will be downloaded, installed, and rebooted automatically. After each update, the application informs you about the changes that were introduced, such as new features or fixes. You can choose to uninstall the old version or keep it. PowerShell module support This application allows you to configure automatic app updates using PowerShell commands. It enables you to control your applications, regardless of which platform they are developed for, such as Windows, macOS, and Linux. Instead of manually updating your applications, you can add one or more PowerShell scripts to the Auto Updates Settings section. Once the update is available, it will be downloaded and installed automatically. This feature may not work with every app, but it can still help you save time. Switching between the different versions of apps When using the Auto Updates features, they don't let you choose between the different minor updates. Instead, you will only be presented with the latest release of each application. This can cause problems for people who use multiple versions of the same app on their PC. Fortunately, PowerAppWatcher has a feature that can help you solve this problem. You can easily select a specific version of an app, such as the previous or the latest one.

Selecting a version may be done using the application's UI, the system tray icon, or the Hotkey key. There is no need to download and install any additional programs or to log on to any servers.
