For removing the emission components contained in the exhaust gases, there is widely used the catalytic converter of a three-way catalyst system in which the three-way catalyst acts as the oxidation catalyst, the adsorbent and the emission reduction catalyst to which the exhaust gas flow from the engine is supplied, the adsorbent comprising a porous honeycomb-shaped substrate made of cordierite, silicon carbide, alumina or the like. That is, in the three-way catalyst system, as shown in FIG. 3, the catalyst layer is formed on the surfaces of the heat-resistant substrate such as cordierite and the like with the use of a refractory inorganic oxide powder, the catalytic active component thereof including the metals selected from the group consisting of V, Cr, Mo, W, Mn, Re, Fe, Co, Ni and the like, a rare earth metal, Ce, La, Y, Zr, Hf and the like in a low concentration, and optionally, in addition thereto, further an alkali metal element such as Li, Na, K, Rb and the like and an alkaline earth metal element such as Mg, Ca and the like.

Accordingly, this catalyst layer reacts for all the exhaust gases containing hydrocarbon (HC), carbon monoxide (CO), nitrogen oxides (NO_x), and the like. It is demanded that the catalyst layer of the three-way catalyst system is formed as thin as possible to decrease the specific weight of the catalyst to enhance the lightening of the vehicle. In other words, as a result of forming the catalyst layer as thin as possible, the pressure loss of the exhaust gas is decreased, and the performance of the catalyst is increased, as well as the lightening of the vehicle can be enhanced. However, this catalyst layer tends to decrease to the thickness of about 0.2-0.4 mm, and when it is thin, the resistance of the catalyst layer to heat is increased and the heat of the exhaust gas is not sufficiently conducted. Therefore, the catalyst Pearl I have a problem with my Pearl. Very rarely when I play music, I have to think about the song and where it's coming from. Sometimes it's here and sometimes there. I feel like I'm having to think of it all the time. It's like I'm playing inside my head. I'm looking for a way to get over that problem, but I don't know what to do, or how to explain it. Please help me if you can. Maybe you have simon too. Simons might be able to help you. He is a cool guy. He is really funny. He has some really great hair. He's not french. His name is simon. Thanks simon. maybe you have simon too. Simons might be able to help you. He is a cool guy. He is really funny. He has some really great hair. He's not french. His name is simon. Thanks simon. I have never heard of simon. I was just curious if any of you knew his name. It could be a different person. Not that I think that simon is your problem. Just a possibility.

I also have simon. i think he may know more about it than the others of us. He posts all the time. He is just so funny. You have to laugh at his posts. If he is helping you then you would know it. If not then he is more likely to say some funny stuff that will make you laugh out loud. Leslie J. Lynn Leslie J.
