Mahesh Tanwar, the defending 100 metres champion, won the men's sprint title in a world-record-breaking time of 9.79secs, while Lucy Kabuu, a 23-year-old javelin thrower, won the women's. "Kenya would never have won this with a 22 year-old who has only been throwing a javelin for six years," said Kenyan coach Davit Lomidze, who had appeared to be more interested in who would be in the final of the men's 1000m rather than whether the defending champion would win it. "But Nairo has this magic touch, and she is a very talented athlete." Kabuu, who threw 40m on her debut last year, also won the British and European titles last year, and took bronze in the world championships in Daegu, South Korea, with a throw of 52.91m, her best. Kenyan Mahesh Tanwar won the men's 100m in a world record-breaking time of 9.79secs "You could not tell if this was a championship or a competition," said Kabuu. "It was a calm, easy atmosphere. I was not scared at all. I did not feel any pressure. I trained for this moment." Tanwar claimed the fastest time at the Kenyan trials and in a friendly meet earlier this year with the time of 9.76. He posted a best of 9.88 and 9.88 in the semi-finals, setting a new world record for the 200m. In the men's final, Tanwar needed to improve on his own previous time of 9.94 from the trials to beat Hicham El Guerrouj's world record of 9.72 from the 2004 Athens Olympics. El Guerrouj was among the field in the semi-finals, but missed out on the final and a bronze medal to Fabrice Lapierre of France in a new world record of 9.75. The defending champion, Maurice Greene of the United
