Free software developers can offer creative people a selection of programs for creation and editing. Overall, the most popular programs include Adobe Photoshop Elements and GIMP. Another free program, OpenOffice Impress, has recently been announced as being open source. It is built on the OpenOffice code base and can be used to create presentations and to edit photos.

Step 1: Getting the Lay of the Land

Each major application has a (consistent) user interface, which can be rather daunting at first glance. Figure 6-2 shows the left side of Photoshop Elements, which takes up a large portion of a typical work space. Figure 6-2: Turn on the Photoshop Elements help file by opening Help in the Edit drop-down menu. The tutorial is really divided into two sections. The first part tells you how to work with an open project file. The second part teaches you how to save and export your own images.

Creating a file

Begin by opening your image in Photoshop Elements. In Figure 6-2, the active canvas is the one that appears where the green line shows.

Creating the interface

The Elements interface places most of your tools and edit controls in one group called Tools and the other in Edit. The Tool bar on the left side of Figure 6-2 contains the usual suspects: the usual tools for working with colors (curves, levels, and so on) and the usual tools for working with images (like crop, perspective, and perspective grids). Although you might not notice it at first, the top of the window contains a number of icons. The eye icon is where you access the help system, which is a program that gives you access to various tutorials (discussed in the next section). The idea is that you know the drill and can jump in and access the best tutorial for your needs right away. The icons at the bottom of the image window allow you to access common icons and tools. The taskbar on the bottom of the screen is where you apply the tools to your image by clicking on the icons. More on this in the next section. If you select an icon from the Taskbar, Photoshop Elements automatically turns off the work on the active canvas and changes the working area to the icon you selected. So if you selected the arrow icon on the right side of the Taskbar, which is the pencil icon, you would be able to draw and edit on an existing image rather than on

A re-examination of vaginal delivery in diabetics. A prospective study of 60 diabetics who were delivered of non-malformed, singleton infants in a university hospital shows a significantly higher rate of cesarean section and assisted vaginal delivery in the diabetics. The perinatal mortality rate is not different between the two groups. A causal relationship between diabetes and the higher cesarean section rate, or assisted vaginal delivery, is not to be established, and a causal relation between diabetes and the higher perinatal mortality rate is not to be excluded. Only 2.5% of UK businesses have made an investment in cloud technology over the past two years, says a new report from Ricoh. Only 2.5% of UK businesses have made an investment in cloud technology over the past two years, says a new report from Ricoh. Over the past two years, only 2.5% of UK businesses have made an investment in cloud technology, according to a new report from Ricoh. In contrast, leading US firms are continuing to make sizeable investments, with over 40% of the country's high-growth companies having adopted cloud technology since 2014. The report, based on proprietary research spanning 175 companies, finds that leading organisations are generally slow to invest in cloud technology despite recognising the benefits. A quarter (25%) of UK companies said they have made no investment in cloud technology in the past two years. The survey also finds that the "cloud wars" are likely to play out in a different way in the UK to the US. The research found that the UK's leading high-growth, large and midsized companies tend to have a significantly smaller cloud adoption picture, are more geographically spread across the country, and have many fewer cloud systems in use relative to their US counterparts. In addition, a much smaller proportion of UK businesses (10%) have had a clear intention to introduce cloud technology over the next two years. The reasons cited for the relatively slower adoption rate in the UK include the "extra security burden" of providing cloud services to consumers, a lack of clear objectives for the technology, and a lack of awareness of the benefits. In contrast, US businesses report that cloud investments are driven by business success, with the number of cloud platforms used by the majority of US businesses doubling from four to eight over the past two years. Smaller companies are also more likely to invest in cloud technology, according to the report. High-growth

Evaluation of tuberculosis prevalence in Saudi Arabia. Saudi Arabia is a country with a relatively high prevalence of tuberculosis (TB) and is classified as high and intermediate burden areas by World Health Organization and Indian WHO. This study was carried out in King Faisal Specialist Hospital and Research Center (KFSH&RC), Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, to assess the TB prevalence in the community and determine the factors associated with TB. In this cross sectional descriptive study, patients visiting the TB clinic of KFSH&RC and diagnosed with tuberculosis were enrolled, and data was collected on sociodemographic data and on socioeconomic factors which may influence TB risk. Tuberculosis was diagnosed by microscopy and culture of sputum samples. We recruited 407 patients, and data were collected on their gender, age, level of schooling, TB family history, tobacco and alcohol use, and presence of lung cancer, diabetes mellitus, chronic kidney disease, hepatic failure, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease and peripheral neuropathy. Among 407 patients, there were 240 (59.4%) males, and 157 (38.5%) females. Age ranged from 10 to 95 years (median = 32 years). Mean age of males was  $32.9 \pm 15.3$  and of females was  $32.2 \pm 16.4$  years. Eighty-five per cent of the patients were Saudi and the rest were from other nationalities. Fifty-eight per cent were non-Saudi expatriates. Gender-wise, TB prevalence in males was higher ( $p=0.001$ ), but there was no difference among Saudis and non-Saudis ( $p=0.57$ ). Patients who had smoked tobacco more than 10 years had an increased odds ratio for TB compared to those who had never smoked tobacco ( $p=0.001$ ) and those who had smoked tobacco less than 5 years ( $p$
