``The main and basic element of RPGs is fantasy story, so how did an RPG with an all-new Fantasy action game, Tarnished exist? The answer is: it's a game that has a Fantasy action RPG in it as well. The game can really be defined as one-stroke RPG, it has comparable features to an RPG for example a game character with various abilities and stats that can be changed but also abilities that are not available in other RPG games that they have skills for example magic and a simple character personality by changing the body color, as well as having a wide range of customizing items, weapons, and armor. The game has a really simple AI, so if you have any issues with the AI, there's the option of talking to other players, exchanging weapons, or visiting a village. The game has a wide variety of dungeons, an open field with various enemies, and story details that can be read and in many ways can be changed by talking with the non-player character you meet. The game has good graphics, for example the development of monsters like wasps, tentacles, and dragons, as well as a variety of magic spells and there are also plenty of items to choose from like weapons, armor, and so on. Characters can have a lot of customization, and they do not disappear in battle, but can be revived, except for the leader character. However, other than restoring the current HP, the character will be in the same condition after the battle. Another good feature is that the game has an option to save at various points in the story, so if you lose your game, you can start over. The gameplay is quite similar to other RPGs such as Dragon Quest. When the game is begun, the person playing the game will need to equip weapons and armor, characters will then randomly appear on the battle screen, the player then attacks the enemy by performing button commands according to the character's stats. If you make an attack, the screen will change, and the things you can attack will appear.

In order to successfully attack the enemy, you need to complete a battle turn by performing attacks in order to deal damage to the enemy. The player can also jump, use a weapon, or use magic to deflect the enemy attack. If an enemy's attack is successful it can change the screens and the player will lose HP, resulting in the battle screen. In addition to actually using the weapon, you can also use the weapon through the bff6bb2d33
