"The Syrian regime and the Syrian National Army, and the people of Syria, was defeated and Daesh was defeated because of Turkey, just as it was defeated in Iraq," said Erdogan in a speech to a crowd of religious people in the southeastern town of Sirnak. Ankara was the first to intervene in the Syrian civil war in mid-2012 to oust Syrian President Bashar al-Assad. "Turkey has to decide whether or not to decide the second front for the fight against Daesh," he added. Turkey has been accused by the United States of sheltering the terror group in its territory and is a part of the US-led coalition fighting Daesh. Erdogan also said the American air strike in Ankara's capital that killed 28 people on Oct. 9 was "not punishment, but punishment of the two Turkish soldiers who committed a mistake," referring to the warplane that hit the Turkish military base.
