My case : Rar support in the build-in OpenOffice. A: Okokker is a very large and well-funded community project, many great people have contributed. Many programs are supported by Okokker, with Free ones like SciLab. Okokker also provides a partially free version (try Okokker Community Edition), see the following page for details: For commercial applications it is quite common (if it is documented at all) to buy the registration key or licence from their developers. For Blu-ray splitter with complete support I could find only one application - AnyDVD - but not sure if this is what you mean by fully supported. There is an unsupported Windows version of AnyDVD though, but it is not free. You need to define what you mean by fully supported. Do you need the ability to use the registry? If so, what features do you need? I don't know Okokker or see the development status of it. But I would not assume that there is a special feature for Blu-ray just because it's Blu-ray. There are many other features you are expecting. For example there are many applications which have a Blu-ray-related tool, but don't provide any feature for Blu-ray. There is an application called BeeDVD/BedeVDCLite which does mostly what you are talking about, but note that it is not able to decompress Blu-ray. It just converts Blu-ray for DVDs or video CDs. I don't think you can get what you need for free from public sources.
